

Crown Estate Lease Agreement XX34/604

Marine leisure

Scotland has some of the best sailing waters in Europe and demand for mooring space is high. Whilst navigation in coastal waters is a public right, the laying of a permanent mooring, or other equipment to hold a vessel, requires consent from the relevant landowner. For seabed, this consent will nearly always come from Crown Estate Scotland.

We operate a licensing system to provide security of tenure for boat owners, whilst protecting the interests of other marine users.

We issue three types of mooring licence, Individual, Commercial and Association.

Associations

- We help set up moorings associations to provide a degree of local management. Once established, associations are given a seabed agreement enabling them to manage their members' moorings within a specific area. Associations are suitable for groups of ten or more moorings and provide a degree of security as pressure on areas traditionally occupied by moorings increases. Another advantage is that the annual charge is less than the fee for an individual mooring.

Lochgoilhead Mooring Association is your local association, acting on behalf of The Crown Estate Scotland, covering the sea bed from Suckbeg, round the head of Loch Goil to Douglas Pier and was officially formed in 2011.
